COLLABORATIVE DIVORCE – A NEW AND BETTER WAY

COLLABORATIVE DIVORCE

Ending a marriage can be very difficult. The focus, once on sentiments of love and devotion, can shift to feelings of loss, hurt and anger. Collaborative Divorce helps couples move through the invariable conflicts that develop during this time of emotional transition in a constructive and problem-solving approach. Because Collaborative Divorce professionals are trained in mediation and the Collaborative Divorce process, they guide clients in negotiating these conflicts civilly. When children are involved, these collaborative skills are crucial to maintaining a working co-parenting relationship for the future.

SUPPORT WHEN YOU NEED IT

Divorce alters many aspects of life, from raising your children to financial and property questions. Navigating these issues alone, in addition to the emotional impact, can be daunting. The collaborative method is a supportive approach where you and your attorney work together with your spouse/partner and their collaborative attorney, as well as other collaborative professionals who are available to help via our interdisciplinary approach to the process. This includes a financial specialist, a divorce coach and a child specialist. Each of these licensed professionals can be instrumental in helping you with your goals and possible solutions.

A NEW AND BETTER WAY

A major difference between Collaborative Divorce and traditional litigated divorce is a pledge to reach an agreement out of court. You both agree, in writing, to be part of a respectful process, solving problems jointly to preserve the integrity of the family. By doing so, you and your spouse/partner maintain control of your decisions instead of having a judge decide what is in your best interest.

COLLABORATIVE PRACTICE OFFERS:

- Mutual respect
- Children's needs prioritized
- You stay out of court
- Increased control of the outcome
- Cost containment
- Open communication
- A problem-solving approach
- Preparation for a new life

OPEN COMMUNICATION

Even under the best of circumstances, talking with your spouse/partner can be stressful. Open lines of communication are essential for reaching an agreement. Our Collaboratively trained Divorce professionals assure that the settlement meetings will support an opportunity for an honest expression of needs and expectations. When issues are openly discussed, problem-solving can be direct and solution-oriented. This model helps couples reach a realistic settlement by building on areas of mutual agreement.

A BETTER ALTERNATIVE

As couples are increasingly seeking a more constructive and often less expensive way to legally dissolve their relationship, Collaborative Divorce is the answer. As needed, collaborative divorce attorneys, mental health professionals and financial professionals work with the couple to resolve their issues by building agreement, without going to court.

COLLABORATIVE DIVORCE IS BASED ON 3 PRINCIPLES:

- A pledge not to go to court
- An honest and open exchange of information between both spouses
- Solutions that address the needs and concerns of all family members

A New Path to Respectful Resolution

A FOCUS ON THE FUTURE

Divorce legally ends a marriage but, when children are involved, lifelong responsibilities remain. By fostering respect and encouraging cooperation between the parents, the collaborative process helps parents and children maintain important family bonds to enable them to move forward in a way that helps everyone heal.

COLLABORATIVE ATTORNEY

Collaboratively trained attorneys pledge to keep you out of Court. Their main task focuses on problem solving for the family. This includes advising you on your rights and obligations as they relate to issues of parenting, custody, support, equitable distribution of property and other financial matters.

DIVORCE COACH

A collaboratively trained, licensed mental health professional helps you cope with emotions that could become an obstacle to a collaborative agreement. This is not therapy. The coach helps you focus on the present to better plan your future.

CHILD SPECIALIST

Communication within the family can be difficult during this time. The collaboratively trained child specialist shares the children's concerns with the parents so an informed and comprehensive parenting plan can be developed.

FINANCIAL SPECIALIST

A divorce settlement affects your finances for years. The collaboratively trained financial specialist protects your family's interests by reviewing assets, debts and incomes while developing viable options for your future. You and your attorneys then construct a comprehensive plan.
